In 1960 the Institute of Archaeology, University of London, published an Occasional Paper Problems of the Iron Age in Southern Britain, which included an important article by the late D. F. Allen, 'The Origins of Coinage in Britain: a Reappraisal' (hereafter Origins). When the decision was made to reprint the Occasional Paper, its Editor, Professor S. S. Frere, proposed that the Gazetteer of Findspots of Celtic Coins in Britain, which formed such an important part of Mr. Allen's article, should be brought up-to-date by the inclusion of finds made since the volume went to press. In the event, the supplementary list turned out to be quite substantial and, accordingly, it has been decided to issue it as a separate Paper rather than as an addendum to the reprinted volume. This has the advantage that the supplement becomes more easily available to those who hold copies of the original Problems of the Iron Age in Southern Britain.

A photographic card index of Celtic coins is maintained by Professor S. S. Frere at the Oxford Institute of Archaeology, 36 Beaumont Street, Oxford. He will be glad to hear of new discoveries of coins and will provide a photograph for publication of any coin submitted for recording in the Index.

The Institute acknowledges with gratitude the help given by Professor S. S. Frere and Mr. Roger Goodburn of the Institute of Archaeology, University of Oxford.

SUPPLEMENTARY GAZETTEER OF FIND-SPOTS OF CELTIC COINS IN BRITAIN, 1977

Compiled by Colin Haselgrove

INTRODUCTION

When the Institute of Archaeology announced its intention of reprinting Problems of the Iron Age in Southern Britain, it felt that sufficient new information had come to light since 1961 to justify the inclusion of a supplement of coins recorded since publication of the first lists. Much of this information derives from notes kept by Derek Allen, and it has only been possible to verify some of this material in the short period of time available for the compilation of this supplement. An attempt has also been made to include those coins found since Allen's death in June 1975, which have been published, or reported to the major institutions, including the Ashmolean Museum, the Fitzwilliam Museum and the British Museum. However, it is inevitable that many other finds will have escaped notice for the time being, and, indeed, one of the major reasons for the publication of this interim statement lies in the hope that museums, excavators or other workers, who have knowledge of material which has not been included in the supplement, or who have reason to believe that the information given in a particular case is inaccurate, will communicate their discoveries to Professor S. S. Frere for inclusion in his index of Celtic coins, housed at 36 Beaumont Street, Oxford.

It seems that the study of British Iron Age coinage has itself reached a turning point and that in the future research will be increasingly devoted towards the integration of the coin evidence with the rest of the archaeological data, of which it is after all only one component. There should be no serious disagreement that increased understanding of prehistoric societies in Britain will only come about through consideration of the evidence as a whole and through the investigation of the relationship between different aspects of the material culture of those societies, both within and between sites. For this reason, perhaps the most significant development of the last fifteen years has been the vast increase in the number of coin-finds from stratified excavation contexts, many of which are listed below. Only through the detailed study of associations and stratification of these coin finds can we hope to relate coinage to other components of material culture. This is crucial if we are to understand the significance of the adoption of coinage in Britain and the role it played in the social and economic life of pre-Roman Iron Age communities. Indeed, the importance of such an approach was amply demonstrated in the original publication of this volume in 1961, with Professor Frere's reappraisal and redating of the Dorset sequence (1961, 88 - 90). Such questions as the extent to which the continued circulation of British coins in the period after the Roman conquest may have distorted the existing pre-Roman patterns cannot be answered until the information from excavated sites becomes available. Similarly, the most serious obstacle, at present, to our interpretation of the distribution of various coin-types is lack of information concerning the length of time these types remained in circulation - we simply do not know whether the areas in which various coins circulated remained constant during the currency of a particular series or whether significant changes occurred. Such information can only come from the hoards - and here it is important that any new hoards are retained intact in Museums, or at least thoroughly recorded with casts and photographs before dispersal - and from the study of the associations of individual coins on archaeological sites. For this reason, it is disappointing to note that many of the sites excavated since 1961, and indeed before then, have yet to be fully published. In particular, the early publication of the sites of the Braughing and Harlow complexes must be a fundamental priority.

It is also, perhaps, worth reiterating Allen's cautions (Frere, 1961, 146, note 6) concerning the accuracy of the grid reference given for many of the finds. The figures given are only very approximate and intended for the preparation of small-scale distribution maps. In some cases, more details of find-spots are available on the cards for individual coins in the index, but for the majority of chance coin finds, the standard of recording leaves much to be desired and a substantial improvement is called for in the future. Another problem, which has become especially prominent in recent years, concerns the increasing number of coins which are recovered from known Iron Age and Roman sites, with no regard for the possible significance of their archaeological context, and frequently never even reported. It is to be hoped that archaeologists can come to an interim understanding with other interested parties which will ensure the effective protection of particularly important sites and permit the full recording of discoveries at the other sites.

In conclusion, I should like particularly to thank Mrs. Allen for allowing me access to her husband's notes, without which much of the information included in this supplement could not have been collected for a number of years, and also Professor Frere for his advice and permission to make use of his index of Celtic coins. I should also like to thank Roger Goodburn for his help, and Angela Ambrose for undertaking the arduous task of typing the list of find-spots for publication.

NOTES

1. 'D.F.A.' refers to information noted by D. F. Allen in his own copy of the Gazetteer of Find-spots of Celtic Coins in Britain, now deposited in the Heberden Coin Room, Ashmolean Museum, Oxford.

2. 'Index' refers to the index of Celtic Coins kept by Professor S. S. Frere at the Institute of Archaeology, Oxford. As well as the findspot and a photograph, the card for each coin records details of weight, specific gravity, present ownership and bibliographical information, where these are known.

3. IAHF refers to D. F. Allen, 'British Potin Coins: A Review', in (eds.) M. Jesson and D. Hill, The Iron Age and its Hillforts, Southampton, 1971, 127-154.

4. Coritani refers to D. F. Allen, The Coins of the Coritani, London, 1963 (Sylloge No. 3).

5. Stukeley 1720 is a manuscript notebook begun in 1720 by William Stukeley. Stukeley 1762 refers to various Mss. dated 1762 now in the Bodleian Library, Oxford. For further details, see Allen (1968), in the bibliography.

6. Syll. refers to various volumes in the series Sylloge of Coins of the British Isles published by the British Academy, London.

7. CAMB refers to Seaby's Coins and Medal Bulletin, published monthly in London.

8. Coins in the collection of R. P. Mack at the time of his death in 1975 are listed as such. His collection is, however, in the process of being dispersed at public auctions.

9. Bagendon refers to E. M. Clifford, Bagendon: A Belgic Oppidum, Cambridge 1961.

10. Coins reputedly forming part of a hoard found midway between Guildford and Haslemere in 1944 are included for the sake of completeness. However, detailed investigation has failed to uncover any further information relating to the actual findspot, and indeed it is only fair to point out that numismatic and archaeological opinion is divided as regards the authenticity of the coins themselves. No grid reference is given for this find.

11. The county boundaries given here are those that existed prior to the 1974 Local Government reorganisation, in order to maintain uniformity with the 1961 edition of the Gazetteer.

12. New finds of coins belonging to the series first listed by D. F. Allen as Gallo-Belgic XA - Gallo-Belgic XF have been treated in a different manner in this Supplementary Gazetteer, in order to take account of recent research by Dr. S. Scheers. Following Scheers (1973) Gallo-Belgic XC1 and XC2 have been listed under Gallo-Belgic E and Gallo-Belgic D respectively. New finds of Gallo-Belgic XA, XB, XE and XF in Britain are included under Miscellaneous Gaulish - Gold (A. Belgic Gaul), but no attempt has been made to update the 1961 list of continental findspots for these types. References are, however, given in that section to the wealth of new information from the Continent made available by Scheers' work. This departure has been made on the grounds that in future, and fully revised, editions of this Gazetteer, it may not prove possible, for reasons of space and cost, to include details of all the continental findspots of every Gaulish coin type found in Britain. As the primary concern of this Gazetteer is with British Iron Age coinage, it would seem best to limit the inclusion of continental findspots to British coins and to coins which circulated in quantity on both sides of the Channel, i.e. Gallo-Belgic A, B, C, D (including XC2) and E (including XC1), for which many, if not the majority, of the findspots are located in Britain.

13. It is probable that Gallo-Belgic XD, of which there have been no new finds, should be classed as Uncertain Gaulish or British, rather than as Gallo-Belgic.

14. A substantial number of coins of the Coritani found since 1961 have been omitted from the supplementary Gazetteer in view of their impending publication elsewhere by Mr. H. R. Mossop. These include specimens of British H, I and K.

15. In his important, although sometimes controversial, survey of the late pre-Roman Iron Age in the south-east of Britain, Dr. W. Rodwell (1976) has published a series of new distribution maps for the main Gallo-Belgic and British coin types found in the region. In recording several finds made subsequent to 1961 and noted in the index of Celtic coins, these maps replace those hitherto available. However, owing to the steady accumulation of new finds and the incorporation in the present supplement of information which was not available at the time these discoveries were plotted, the following list includes a number of findspots not represented on Rodwell's maps. In addition, the plated Gallo-Belgic AB specimen mentioned by Rodwell (1976, 186 and Fig. 2) appears to be a modern forgery of a coin in Colchester Museum (CM.150.1941), rather than a contemporary forgery as was thought at first (R. Roberts, pers.comm.).

16. Abbreviations, other than those listed above, either follow the 1961 edition or should be self-explanatory.

N.B. According to D. F. Allen (Essex J. 1973, 44), 55 coins from this site came on the market in 1969. The list here, compiled from the Oxford Index, implies a slightly higher total, but this may include subsequent finds from this or other Harlow sites. The exact findspot is uncertain, though it is likely that they all came from a single area, and it is thought they may have been found at a car park in Old Harlow.
